

THE SPY IN BLACK

BY J. STORER CLOUSTON

AUTHOR OF "THE PEER'S PROGRESS," "THE PRODIGAL FATHER" ETC

which is to be delivered into the hands of a mysterious personage alluded to as "him.

her beauty, frankly suggests they abandon less important topics and talk about herself.

calls that he has seen a strange elergyman strolling in the vicinity.

neck of water, and con Betke is to be on hand with four submarines.

Synopsis of the Preceding Instalments

MIS startling novel of the German spy system is mainly the narrative of Lieutenant von Belke, of the German navy, with a few additional chapters by Mr. Clouston. Lieutenant von Belke lands from a submarine, with his motorcycle, upon those islands where the British Grand Fleet has its lair. He carries an important paper,

Part II comprises "a few chapters by the editor," and introduces the Rev. Alexander Burnett, a country elergyman

The scene shifts to a mail boat crossing the English Channel. Two persons, a handsome lady named Miss Hol-

Part III resumes the narrative of Lieutenant von Belke, who, obedient to a signal from a window of the nearby

Another accomplice enters—a lady this time, presented to von Belke as Miss Burnett. Von Belke, immessed with land and a man in elected attive, purporting to be the Rev. Alexander Burnett, of Berwickshire, engage in conversation.

When the ship docks they shake hands and separate. Miss Holland gets herself placed in the home of Mr. and Mrs.

Craigic as governess to their two young daughters. But shortly thereafter she leaves mysteriously. Mr. Craigic rewanse, pays his respects to one Adolph Tiel, the mysterious person alluded to in the beginning as "him." Tiel is impersonating the Rev. Burnett. Captain Ashington enters the tale, introduced as a British navel officer who has turned traitor, and who is supplying the information about the departure of the flect. To do so it must pass through a narrow many are as strong as yours. ble tone, Mr. Belke," she answered. "Indeed, I don't think any one can be more loyal to their country than I am. But I am not purely have done serious mischief by showing hence my name-Eileen.'

PART III CHAPTER VII (Continued)

between surprise and delight.

"Yes, that is the one genuine thing to meet you again." about me," she smiled.

"But if you are half English"-"Irish," she corrected.

thies were not at all divided. But Irish Eileen, lish with a double hatred?" I have made-I abhor the whole race I clous part, or showing myself perhaps to am fighting against quite as much as you great advantage. So I bade them both could possibly wish me to. Indeed, I wish good night, and returned to my room. it were fighting and not merely plotting." But it was not to go to bed. For two you?

solute confidence.

her face.

"But let us get away for a little from Please do, if you wish to."

lightly for a while, or perhaps, I should at length about 3 o'clock in the morning. rather say, less earnestly, for our situation did not lend itself to frivolity. It did lend itself, however, to romance-we two sitting on either side of the peat fire, with a shaded lamp and the friendly flames throwing odd lights and shadows through room, we talked of many things.

At last, all too soon, she rose and graven image.

"Oh, no!" she protested. "After all,

"Tut!" I said. "It is sheer rubbish said he.

time of night. Probably he is still out, served. and, anyhow, he will not have visitors at ly, as if to see if I were possible to scored. I resolved not to give him the "Do you mean to say that Tiel didn't wonder what he will say." argue with, and then 'she gave a little chance again. He then proceeded to press you?"

* to the front of the house. And then sud- that the little cloud seemed to blow over, is most important."

had passed this, while I had not, and so Ashington, and as they seemed extremely try to use more authority?" "Well?"

instant I forgot the problem of the other voice I had heard.

"Mr. Belke is with me. He insisted." she cried.

At this I knew that the unknown voice could not belong to an enemy and I advanced again. As I passed the bend in the passage I was just in time to see Tiel closing the front door behind a man in a long, dark coat with a gleam of brass !

buttons, and to hear him say: "Good night, Ashington."

Eileen passed into the parlor with a smiling glance for me to follow, and Tiel came in after us. I was not in the most pleasant temper. In fact, for some reason I was in a very black humor.

"I thought you had gone out," I said to him at once.

"I did go out.

"But now I understand that the worthy Captain Ashington has been visiting you here.

"Both these remarkable events have occurred," said Tiel dryly. When I recalled how long Eileen had been up in my room I realized that this was quite possible, but this did not. for some reason, soothe me.

"Why did he come?" I asked. "The fleet is going out on Friday." "Aha!" I exclaimed, forgetting my an-

"So that is settled at last," said Tiel, with a satisfied smile.

He happened to turn his smile on WAS wondering whether you Eileen also, and my annoyance returned were a pure German.' I "You dismissed our dear friend Ash-

Tiel looked at me gravely.

German by blood. My mother was Irish, your dislike for Ashington so palpable "Then that is your real name?" I cried, has feelings. I have soothed them, I am glad to say, but he was not very anxious are not the usual company a German off-

"Ah!" I cried. "I see-of course. I "Many of us have to mix with strang is very different. Then you hate the Eng- Her sparkling eye and her grave smile disarmed me instantly. I felt suddenly "With one or two exceptions-friends conscious I was not playing a very judi-

There was an earnestness and inten- mortal hours I paced my floor, and sity in her voice and a kindling of her thought and thought, but not about any We both laughed and wished him good I felt I had to say it outright. eye as she said this that thrilled and in- problem of the war. I kept hearing luck, and then before he left he said: "We shall defeat them-never fear," I intimate way, and then remembering that Belke. Remember we are here on busi- didly. cried. "We shall trample on the pride of those two were alone-all night-in the ness," England. It will be hard to do, but I front part of the house, far out of sound And with that he put on his black felt such a thing, but"have no doubt as to the result; have or reach of me. I did not doubt Eileen hat, and bade us lock the front door after. She broke off, and I finished her senfor an instant, but that calm, cool, cos him, and, if anybody called, explain that it tence for her. Then that quick smile of hers, a little and throw him over a chiff and then tell very thoroughly. grave, but very charming, broke over the story with a smile, what was he not The suggestion in his last words that I "Ah, don't be unjust to him!" she ancapable of?

war," she said. "You aren't smoking, it concerned me. This was a girl I had let Tiel see that they had any effect, but go like that!" known only for hours. But her smile was as soon as he had gone I rose and said to "So it was to get rid of me, and have his voice as he said this, and, whatever I I knew Wiedermann very intimately. I lit a cigerette, and we talked more the last thing I saw before I fell a deep Eileen:

CHAPTER VIII .

the low, primitive room with its sloping, and I looked at those two very hard. Three's and sea. And neither on land nor sea as he always did-and I cannot put it not really care to face. was there a single friend; surrounded by stronger than that, for nothing more "I fear I must," I replied in a voice stay!" enemies who would have given a heavy cool and imperturbable than Tiel ever which must have revealed something of "And Commander Wiedermann?" price to have learned who sat in that breathed. In fact, it could not have what I felt, breathed, for it would have had to be a "Tiel told me you absolutely refused to higher orders, given me by Herr Tiel."

Soon after 11 o'clock two dark figures | 1 gave Eileen's band of distent to him when he wished you to re
it you added that there is a second | Soon after 11 o'clock two dark figures | 1 gave Eileen's band of distent to him when he wished you to re
it you added that there is a second | Soon after 11 o'clock two dark figures | 1 gave Eileen's band of the pressure, and jumped out.

wished me good night. A demon of per- He looked at me critically, but all he main." said was:

fast on the lawn,"

"Yes," said he, "I am a nervous man.' I sat down again, too. She looked at me very hard and quick. not but confess that for once he had asked. igh, and merely said:

"You are sure? Eve lent my spare of "No." I said.

"You are terribly wilful, Mr. Belke!" room, pulled the nearest curtain part "Mr. Belke," she said carnestly. "I "No." she replied, "because, of course, to Belke, but I can get another rug."

denly I heard guarded voices, and stopped and we all three discussed our coming plan "You are quite sure of this?" dead. "You are quite sure of this?"

When he had finished and had a smoke, had an idea. cance, but the voice in which it was said parish business." I asked him what he what is in your mind," noyance for the moment

ington very quickly when you heard me "My feelings toward Ger- coming," I remarked in no very amia-"Belke," he said, "you might quite well the other day. Even a man of that sort

"So much the better," said I. "Traitors cer keeps.

was going to ask whether your sympa- company nowadays. Mr. Belke," said "It is quite clear that I ought to return to my room. I have notes to write up- admitted, "for you ought to stay."

and several things to do before to-night." "I shall stay," I said. "Then you are really going to leave us She gave me her brightest smile. to-night?" said she. "I am very sorry."

is the minister's almost exact image.

ing her-probably forever-would have tainly running a risk." cave her alone with Tiel was maddening, doubly decided now, then Tiel at once assumed I was going to presence here is," she suggested. "You are afraid some one may come leave him and told me to say no more "Yes," I agreed, "it would be well to "I'm coming, too," said Eileen.

She really seemed quite concerned at "On the whole, there is rather more "Really! That is somewhat extraordi; "Also," she said, "you would require to his which seemed to call upon the quest-very attractive in Tiel. As I set out on little from the truth when I answered: with this. She had been standing, and to keep you to explain anything." to pretend that there is any risk at this "You think a great deal of risks," I ob- she sat as she spoke. I felt that she "You think a great deal of risks," I ob- she sat as she spoke. I felt that she "You think a great deal of risks," I ob- she sat as she spoke. I felt that she "You think of everything!" I cried with her reason is good enough for anybody. for it did not strike me as an exhibitant really justified in saying this, but I de-

And she ran downstairs very quickly, way across, and then locked the front know enough of the orders under which he won't say it. He will only think." as though to run away from me. I fol- door. But I made no comments this time, we are acting and the plans that Tiel has "Let him think," I laughed. lowed fast, but she was some paces ahead At breakfast, Eileen acted as hostess, got to further to be quite certain that you I went back to my room in a strange ing beside her.

"Are you his motive?" I demanded.

Tiel's "Well!" spoken in that hatefully "You had better get back to your room. She looked at me quickly, but quite can- presence at a council of war could add no hand at last. So confident did I feel of her what is all this about staying on shore?

to get what he wants."

was placing semething else before my swered, and then, in a different voice, he said. "And, let me tell you, I appre- enough excuse, but-what do you think?" nurily lucky to have escaped detection so Again and again I asked myself why duty stung me a little. I was not going to added: "But to think of his letting you clate your courage," > you alone here with him?" "He must have had some motive," becoming in the chimney and scouring land Tiel, he looked as cool and imperturbable the thought of remaining was one I did fear risks," I said. "It is my duty to stay overall's lying ready to be donned once and we were almost at the end of our "If it were not my duty, sir," I said. for two reasons-and I am going to more.

"I shall simply tell him I am under plan directed against the British navy back door, and a moment later a third foi-"Oh, no!" I cried. "That is putting it and that you are needed to advise on the lowed them. My heart leaped with joy in a low voice, "but don't be longer than feel yourself that it is feasible enough to "I shall escort you down to Mr. Tiel, "If it wasn't too wet for your nice far too strongly. I offered to put the details, it might help to convince Com- and surprise at the sight of it, and Tiel you can help. Remember my nerves!" and the devil take his precautions!" I uniform, Belke, we might have had break- case to Commander Wiedermann, and mander Wiedermann how essential your stopped and turned.

mention that."

my intention, but I can be very obstinate risk of that than of some one climbian naryl" she exclaimed in rather a low have all the details of this first plan so tioner to answer with exceeding accuracy, my solitary walk down to the shore I sudup to look in at your bedroom window," voice, as though she was much struck fully written out that he would not need "Because I'd like a drive," she and dealy wondered what made him so cheer- After all, I had confidence enough in wished to go further into this matter, and an admiration I made no pretence of con- "As you please," he said dryly and with occasion. And then I was reminded of termined to press him for some details of cealing. "I shall go now and set to work." unfathomable calm, and then he turned the man I had known most like Tiel, a his plans to-morrow.

"I wonder, too," said I. "But do you "Quite enough, thank you."

of me as we went down the dark passage and so charming and natural was she were intended to stay and assist him. It state of exhibitant and drove, and Eileen or changed my mind and went away? I And so we parted, he descending the There was a bend in the passage just freely. Tiel made several suggestions "Then why did Tiel give up trying to uniform or no uniform. I should be shot if the engine he was certainly not given time I did not lose it. The rolling, humbefore it reached the hall, and Eileen which he said he had been discussing with persuade me so readily? Why didn't he I were caught. I put little trust in Eng- much choice. And then, with a deep pure mocky links were a little darker, but the were burned, and I felt it was better to lish justice or elemency. But, as I said we rolled off into the night. could see nothing ahead. Then I heard sound I made notes of them and promised "I wonder." she said in a musing tone, before, when I am obstinate I am very There would be no moon till getting on as a winter's night, and I could see my parting. Besides, there was a meeting and yet I could see from her eye that she obstinate, and I was firmly resolved that toward morning, but the rain had luckily way well enough. As I advanced, I awaiting me. if Wiedermann wanted me back on board ceased and the wind fallen, and overhead smelled the same pungent seaweed odor. When I reached the end of the road, I It was a simple word of little signifi. Tiel rose and said he must go out "on "You know!" I exclaimed. "Tell me to-night he would have to call a guard the stars were everywhere breaking and heard the same gulls crying dis-found that Tiel had been spending the time and carry me. However, acting on through the last wisps of cloud. Already turbed, I hoped, by the same monster in in turning the car, and now he and Eileen filled me with a very unpleasant sensa- meant, and learned, to my amusement, Already I guessed, but I dared not put Eileen's suggestions, I had little doubt I they gave light enough to distinguish sea the waters. Fortunately the storm had steed beside it, but apparently not conconfidential way that I suddenly felt I ander Burnett he had to attend a meetcould have shot him cheerfully. For the could have shot him cheerfully. For the ing of what he called the "kirk session," exactly," she said rather slowly.

"It is difficult to guess Tiel's motives—to work on my notes. By evening 1 had they faintly lit the whole, wide, treeless this westward-facing bay heaved quietly, "All right?" he asked.

"Yes," I said, "I met everything so fully written out and so countryside. The car was a good one, reflecting the radiance of the stars. It- "Yes," I said. "I met Wiedermann and clearly explained that I felt I could say with a clear conscience that even my own | For reply she very gently pressed my you will get them-never doubt it. But further information. *

"I scarcely like to say, or even think In the course of the day I had a talk question settled. with Tiel, and, just as Eileen had antici- "By the way," she said in a moment, "I "Herr Tiel," I said. "I was placed un pated, he left one to guess at what was in think perhaps it might be advisable to say der his orders, as you will remember, sir, his mind. He certainly professed to be nothing to Commander Wiedermann about "But what does he want you for? And "None," she said quietly, but with ab- mopelitan adventurer, who could knock was to keep the wind from shaking it. I "But you know he admires you, and is glad I had changed my mind, and he me. It is quite unnecessary, and he how long does he imagine the British are an unsuspecting clergyman on the head must say he thought of these small points not a man to stick at anything in order thanked me with every appearance of well, some men are always suspicious if going to let you stay in this house of cordiality.

There was a ring of evident sincerity in phatically, might think of the man's moral charac- and had been divided in mind whether I "But is it your da she fer, a compliment from Tiel on one's should drop a little hint that there were dering, Belke, whether I can spare vou, courage was not a thing to despise.

tain a motor car for the evening's expedi- "What's that?" said Eileen in a mostake the consequences." "Really? Oh, how good of you! Or, tion, but through what ingenious machin- ment. So was I. Indeed, the thought of leav- rather, how brave of you, for it is cer- ery of lies he got it I was too busy to inquire.

and the wind all the while tempestuously me the most intense relief, while as for It had troubled me greatly last night, yet "It is not the German navy's way to bulging with my notes, and my cycle had broken down, greater than his.

CHAPTER IX

On the Shore

"What's the matter" be asked

Eileen laughed merrily, and I could: "Winst is extraordinary about it?" I "Do!" she cried. "And when Tielcomes again and in a voice that betrayed his in- captain I once served under, who was Wiedermann stood silent for a moment;

got on?"

"I am quite sure," she smiled.

just decided to forego the thing he had and I got in behind. He offered no ob- could scarcely believe it. most looked forward to and run a horrible jections to this arrangement, though as I kept along by the side of the sandy out along the path that by now was beginrisk instead. For I felt in my bones that, she seated herself while he was starting track, just as I had done before, only this ming to feel quite familiar. I did not even should convince him. And thereupon I set from land very plainly, and very soon blown from the southeast, and the sea in versing, me and recognized some features of the ment later I had grasped Wiedermann by way we had come-the steep hill and the the hand. He spoke but a word of cordial ceased to wander out of the car.

once she leaned toward me and said in a I replied. low, beseeching voice:

"You will come back, won't you?" "I swear it," I answered fervently, and manded.

to give force to my oath I gently took her. hand and pressed it. If it did not return to be done." the pressure it at least did not shrink I told him then, concisely and clearly, from my clasp. And for the rest of the what we had arranged, and handed him way I sat holding it.

and whispered:

"One thing I have been wondering, could be no doubt, "He shook me warmly Should I take Tiel with me to see Wieder- by the hand, and said: mann? It might perhaps be expected." "No," she replied emphatically.

"You feel sure?"

sure judgment that I considered that What else are you needed for? And who they think there is a woman in the case, yours unsuspected? They are not idiots, consolations or whether I had better not, with this attack coming on, and whether I from hitter enough in any case, but to If I had been decided before, I was filed cave her alone with Tiel was maddening, doubly decided now.

Finally, about 10 o'clock at night, we saw a loch on the other side, and remem-sweet picture of Eileen that I was filed cave her alone with Tiel was maddening, doubly decided now.

Finally, about 10 o'clock at night, we saw a loch on the other side, and remem-sweet picture of Eileen that I was filed cave her alone with Tiel was maddening, doubly decided now. drive. Round the corner we swung, firmly, "clearly and strongly pointed out straight for the sea, until we stopped by Herr Tiel. I should never dream of where the road ended at the edge of the asking you to spare me for a little longer."

I gave Eileen's hand one last swift the question?"

"We shall wait for you here," said Tiel fact, if it had not been for Eileen and his - I have put down exactly what he said, "Why?" he demanded in that tone of love of mystery there was much that was though it convicts me of having departed a swered with a woman's confidence that ful and bright at this particular moment, Tiel's abilities to feel sure that I was in I shall tell him you are going to stay. I terest in her asked: "What have you silence and calmness itself at most times, then he held out his hand and said in a but grew strangely genial on critical occa- sad voice; sions—a heaven-sent gift. But from Tiel's "Goodby! But my mind misgives me. I "You are sure? I've lent my spare coat point of view, what was critical about this fear we may never meet again." moment? The risk he ran at this hour in "That is nonsense, sir!" I cried as cheer-stars shone in myriads, bright and clear hurry on without dwelling longer on the however Tiel had come by it, and the was another perfect night for our purpose engine was pulling well, and we swept I reached the shore, and turned to the along the lonely roads at a great pace, one left along the rising circumference of the bare telegraph post after another flitting bay, looking hard into the night as I went. swiftly out of the gloom ahead into the Something dark lay on the water, I felt gloom behind, and the night air rushing certain of it, and presently something else against our faces. At first I looked round dark and upright loomed ahead. A mo-

He turned and stared at me.

"Haven't you settled anything?" he de-"Something," I said, "but there is more the chart and all my notes. That he was Presently I, in turn, leaned toward her honestly delighted with my news and satisfied with my own performance there

> "Splendid, Belke! I knew we could count on you. It's lucky you have a chest broad enough to hold all your decorations. For the devil has given you such orders?"

"I agree with you entirely," I said em- far. Surely, you are not going to risk a longer stay?"

In the late afternoon he set out to ob- New I saw quite clearly I had better not, ought to override Herr Tiel's orders and he readside, and then, looking round, I before my mind's eye such a distinct,

"Extremely." "And this other scheme of his-do you

"He was, then, very clear and strong on justify you in leaving your ship and run-He spoke so cheerily and genially that ning such a terrible risk? Remember, you for the moment I liked him again. In will be a man lost to Germany."

such an isolated spot was almost negligi- fully as I could. "We shall meet again More than ever I felt glad I was stay- ble, and as to the other circumstances, did very soon. And if you wish something to bank without another word, and I setting gave him all the plans." He merely nodded, and went to start the engine. Again I was forcibly reminded of my old captain and the way in which he became calmer and more silent than ever the moment the crisis was passed. But surely this crisis had been mine and not his. Anyhow, I felt a singularly trong sense of reaction, and seated myself beside Eileen without a word. We had gone for a little way on our homeward road before either of us spoke, and then it was to exchange some quite ordinary remark. I put out my hand gently, but hers was nowhere to be found, and this increased my depression. I fell very silent

"I wonder whether you are really glad that I returned?" "Very," she said, and there was such back, I exclaimed:

deep sincerity in her voice that the cloud began to lift at once. Yet I was not in high spirits when I reentered my familiar room.

and then suddenly, when we were nearly

Another Episode in Next Sunday's Review

who is induced to visit a parish on the island just mentioned, with an idea of applying for a elerical vacancy. He is called sound that led to the western ocean and greeting, and then turned to descend to for by a certain Mr. Taylor, who is to carry him in his auto to the house of the minister's triend. Robert Drummond. the dark mass of hills beyond-but very the boat. At one stave of the journey, which takes place after dark, they leave the car for the purpose of investigating a mysterisoon my thoughts and my eyes alike had "We'll get aboard before we talk," ons light, which the chanffeur has seen. When close to a cliff the minister is struck on the head by this chanffeur, who said he. We said little, just enough to serve as The difficult moment had come. Frank-Then Robert Drummond is visited by a British naval lieutenant, who acquaints him with the news that his friend an excuse for my looking constantly at ly, I had dreaded it a little, but it had to has just been picked up by a patrol boat, unconscious from a blow on the head and half drowned. The lieutenant carries her profile and admiring every line and be faced and got over. off with him a telegram Mr. Drummond has previously received, ostensibly from the Rev. Burnett, advising him not to curve the more the longer I looked. All at "I am not coming aboard to-night, sir," look for him after all, as his plans have altered.